'Instinct for Water' painting exhibition by Maria Filopoulou

Maria Filopoulou celebrates the pure pleasure of summer holidays on the Greek islands – there could be as many as six thousand – with an exhibition of paintings featuring underwater swimmers.

The exhibition takes place from 15th April until 17th May at Belgravia Gallery, 45 Albermarle Street, London W1S 4JL.

Maria has chosen to paint waterfall of Samothrace (Island of the Great Gods), Hydra (island of artists and artisans, no cars allowed),

Serifos (not so famous, but spectacular beaches) and Milos (a tourist paradise, Island of Colours, underwater caves).

The painter was born in Athens in 1964 and studied in Paris at the Ecole des Beaux

Arts from 1984-1988.

She continued with post-graduate studies and awarded a scholarship by the French government.

Since 1990 she has had seventeen solo exhibitions, several in Greece, three in Paris, others in New York and London. From 1987 until 2011, at least one-hundred group exhibitions have celebrated her work in galleries around the world; her paintings can be seen in the Greek Parliament and Athens National Gallery of Fine Art, private museums and collections in Greece and abroad.

Belgravia Gallery will feature approximately 20 paintings.
